

DAWN

Through my un-curtained window, set with stars,
The dawn-wind steals. There is a whispering sound
Among the trembling leaves that faintly blur
The pallid east. And, in dark vestments gowned,
Against the walking day the misty hills
Loom tall, majestic, waiting to be crowned.

By Beth Slater Whitson

From: Metropolitan Magazine
Vol. 26, No. 1, Pg. 15
March or April, 1907

AND

From: Singing Wires: A Book of Poems – Page 29
Bruce Humphries Publishing – Boston
Copyright 1958 – LOC Catalog No. 58-6821