

IGNORANCE

The vague foreboding that some distant day
Would tell me love had only been a name,
In our most sacred hours I felt its chill;
And life would look a desert vast and strange.
I could not know that death would seal your love
Beyond the possibility of change.

By: Beth Slater Whitson

From: Singing Wires: A Book of Poems – Page 14
Bruce Humphries Publishing – Boston
Copyright 1958 – LOC Catalog No. 58-6821