

INDIAN SUMMER

The birds go by like shadows, and the sun
Shines through a tender haze upon the hills
Where smoldering fires of dead sunsets burn
The wind is but a fragrant sigh that fills
The silences. And there are silver threads
Where in the springtime sped the noisy rills.

By Beth Slater Whitson

From: The "Oakland (CA) Tribune" Newspaper
Vol. __, No. __, Pg. 7
September 19, 1907

AND

From: Metropolitan Magazine
Vol. 26, No. 6, Pg. 723
September, 1907