

MIDST REEDS AND RUSHES

The stagnant waters gently lap their feet
Above the beds of slimy moss that holds
Them safe, secure. A sweep of big-leaved vines
All rank and lush, shut out the Summer's gold.
Gray chilling mists embrace them each fair dawn,
And shadow wraps them softly, fold on fold.

By Beth Slater Whitson

From: Metropolitan Magazine
Vol. 26, No. 2, Pg. 238
May, 1907