

MORNING

Through the deep velvet of the dawn
The strange white stars burn soft and clear;
The hooded hills are faintly drawn
Upon the sky as Day draws near.
And Night-time, eager to be gone,
Awaits – the first birdnote to hear.

By Beth Slater Whitson

From: Metropolitan Magazine
Vol. 26, No. 6, Pg. 678
September, 1907

AND

From: The Daily News Democrat
Huntington, Indiana
Vol. __, No. __, Pg. 8
August 31, 1907