

INDIAN SUMMER

The birds go by like shadows, and the sun
Shines through a tender haze upon the hills
Where smoldering fires of dead sunsets burn
The wind is but a fragrant sigh that fills
The silences. And there are silver threads
Where in the springtime sped the noisy rills.

By Beth Slater Whitson

From: The "Oakland (CA) Tribune" Newspaper
Thursday – September 19, 1907 – Page ____